POLICE PUT NO BAN ON HALLOWEEN FUN

Rowdism, However, Will Be Rigorously Repressed by Force.

Nine-year-old Bessie and Jack, you can dress up in mother's old skirts and father's trousers Tuesday night and go out in the streets wearing "bug-a-man faces" on Halloween. You can carry a lighted pumpkin head on the end of a stick and say "boo-oo," quietly and ghost-like when you meet other boys and girls. You can have all the fun the witches will allow and Maj. Pullman will not let the police arrest you unless you try to break windows or do something else awful.

If you are more than 9 years old, you can do the same thing. Of course, you will have to be more careful, because the older you grow the more pranks you may be. If you are big enough to do anything that could be looked on as unlicensed conduct or rowdism, such as throwing flour at people and tearing down gate posts, you had better not try it. Because the police will be watching for just such misbehavior.

Maj. Pullman has issued instructions that no vandalism, rowdism or unlicensed conduct will be tolerated. Halloween is to be recognized as a proper holiday, and if big sister Annie wants to wear Brother Johnny's clothes and draw a burnt cork mustache on her lip, she can do so, provided she doesn't annoy people.

There is little of rowdism left in Washington's celebration of Halloween," said Maj. Pullman. "We expect little trouble from the fun-seeking crowds. There will be no gate-changing or bench stealing if the police can prevent it."

The stealing of automobiles should not worry us much if the owners will lock them."

The department's automobile recovery record is above the average and few joy-riders have escaped.

FINANCIER WATCHES BATTLE FROM 'PLANE

H. P. Davison, of J. P. Morgan & Co.,
Target for Shrapnel.

(By the International News Service.)
New York, Oct. 28.—Harry P. Davison, of J. P. Morgan & Company, arrived today from England on the American liner Philadelphia, accompanied by his wife and daughter, Alice.

In France Mr. Davison had the unique privilege of witnessing the terrific battle for Comblès, in which the French and British armies were victorious. He observed the battle from the seat of an airplane one mile in the air. Shrapnel from German anti-aircraft guns burst all around the machine.

The French government placed a military automobile at the disposal of Mr. Davison, and took him on a tour of inspection along the second line trenches. He witnessed several engagements.

Mr. Davison refused to discuss his mission to England, except to admit he had several conferences with J. P. Morgan on finance and munitions.
